of senator Lodge Frock coats have become so rare in the Senate of the years as to be worthy of mention. There was one incident of the brief seasion more unusual than the presence of the frock coats. This was the corduct of a well-known member of the House of Representatives, who is reflected, resing drunk around the chamber. Once he sank into a chair, placed he solk hat on the floor, rested his face against the cool shiny top of the mahogany Senatorial desk and stretching his arms across the top of it sank into slumber. He was awakened and escorted out by the doorkeepers and nearly took a big screen with him. In five minutes he was back again, but was not allowed to remain long, but hustled out until he melted away into the great throng surging through the outside cerridors.

The Senate row was all about a proposed change in the Senate rules, a revival of the old attempt to adopt cloture in order that Senator Tom Carter's performance of defeating the River and Harbor bill by talking it to death in the closing hours of the session shall never be repeated. When the Subsidy bill was defeated, after having been the regular business, by a very large majority of the Senate the leaders began to talk about the necessity of a cloture rule and the unexpected fate of the River and Harbor bill brought the issue to a crists. Senator Flatt of Connecticut ofered his resolution, providing for a new rule under which a question can be brought to a vote after a "reasonable" season of debate without consultation with the members of the Committee on Rules, but it is the same resolution that has been already introduced at various times in the past by Senators Hoar, Aldrich and other prominent Republicans, and it indicates the prevailing sentiment in favor of some rule to take the control of business in the Senate out of the hands of the minority and put it in the hands of the minority and put it in the hands of the minority and put it in the hands of the minority and put it in the hands of the minority and put it in the hands of the long-mooted subject of whether or not there should be some form of cloture in the United States Senate.

One fact Mr. Roosevelt made very conspicuous while in the chair to-day, and that is that so far as lies in his power the rules of the Senate will be strictly observed. One of these rules says that every Senator when he arises to speak shall first address the Chair. The presiding officer had occasion to enforce this several times in to-day's brief session. He was persistent on this point and would allow no Senator to ignore it. Once or twice he interrupted Senators when they had nearly finished a sentence in order to ascertain whether the floor had been yielded to them by the Senator who had previously had it. He spoke at all times in a low but firm and determined voice and was evidently anxious to acquaint himself thoroughly with the details of his new duties and to carry them out strictly in accordance with the rules of the Senate and the obligations of a presiding officer desirous of heing firm, courteous and eminently fair. The galleries were early bled with spectators and there was an unusually large attendance of Senators. Along with them was Mr. Quay of Pennsylvania, who had taken no part in the priceedings of last session after being elected and sworn in. Ex-Senator Peffer of Kansas was on the floor, renewing his acquaintancestins of former years. The floral display in honor of individual Senators attracted much attention. Some of the flower pieces were very elaborate, particularly those on the desks of Senators Clark of Mantana. Bailey of Texas, Siackform of Kentucky. Wetmore of Rhode Island and Simmons of North Carolina.

The Vice-President's desk had no such decoration but when he made his appearance and stood by the Chaplain prepara-

Judge Fulleton and other eminent members of the New York bar figured in the contest.

The hatred of Charles, Fisher and Theophilus toward their half-brothet George grew with every day that the Gilman vill case" dragged its slow length along in the courts. They called him opprobrious names and they threatened him with physical violence. George, even in those days, back in the early seventies never went about the city without a private detective at his beels. He said that he expected his brothers to assassinate him the first chance they got. That his fears were not without feundation was shown by an event that subsequently occurred. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon, Feb. 3, 1877, he, his three brothers, his attendant and a cabinan engaged in a spirited fight, which began in front of the Equitable Life Assurance building and ended at Cortland street, when all concerned, after blocking traffic in Broadway for several minutes, were taken to the Tombs police court.

This fight was the outcome of a reference hearing in Judge Fulletton's office. When it was over Fisher, Charles and Theorhilus Gilman waited in the lower hailway for their half brother George to come down. George at last appeared with an attendant following to protect him. George passed out the door rapidly to the coupe that was waiting for him in the street. Fisher Gilman pushed by the attendant and thrust his head in the coupe door just as George sat down. The attendant pushed Fisher aside. The driver whipped up his horse and Fisher over the head with the butt of the whip. Fisher Gilman came to his keeping of J. Pieriont lorgen & Co. to the Union Trust Company. From the inception of the project for the building of the cathedral until some months ago J. Pierpont Morgan was the treasurer of the Board of Irustees and his firm was the depository of the funds. A short time ago the trustees in obedience to a general resolution passed by the diocesan convention of 1865, which provided that all church moneys should be lodged with a trust company, made the transfer mentioned.

The action of the convention was brought about by the defalcations of three men in different parts of the diocese to whose care church funds had been committed. A committee of which Mr Morgan was a member recommended and its suggestions were acted upon that hereafter a trust company should be made the custodian of such funds. George Macculloch Miller, secretary of the Board of Trustees, said last night. "Mr Morgan's resignation as treasurer of our body followed the action of that committee. Some time before he had asked to be relieved of the office because of the pressure of other business. At our request, however, he consented to retain charge of the funds until we had completed arrangements with the Union Trust Company to receive our deposits. Mr Morgan had made no charge for taking care of the fund and had contributed $500.00) of it himself. The transfer of funds from a treasurer to a trust company is not peculiar to the cathedral trustees, but is being adopted by all the religious institutions in the diocese in accordance with the nature of the convention."

Arthur W. Fanning, 14 Throop St., Chicago, Ill., had such a remarkable experience himself with Grape-Nuts Food, that he recem-mended it to a friend for his child for whom the parents were unable to find food tha It was supposed the child's stomach had been ruined by the use of medicines. When he was put on Grape-Nuts he began to im-prove and Mr. Fanning says, "I will wager that, although he is but three years old now. he is the best single handed customer the Postum Cereal Co. have to-day. He has become big and strong, and is in perfect conbecome big and strong, and is in perfect condition. I have received thanks many times from his Mother for bringing Grape-Nuts Food to their attention. The whole family are using the food now.

"My own experience was remarkable. I had, for years, a stomach trouble, I got so I could not eat anything for breakfast except an orange; all solis food and meat being out of the question.

When I was induced to take on Grape-Nuts I did so with fear and trembling, but found out, to my pleasure and surprise, and great benefit to my health, that I had a food I could hold on my stomach, and could do a good forenoon swork.

I have not had a headache since using Grape-Nuts Food, and in one year I have gained if pounds. I am so much of an advocate of the food that people suspect me of being interested in the Co. I have won over a number of friends who are now using it, and speak in the highest terms of it."

Grape-Nuts Food wins its own way without any trouble. It can be borne by the weakert stomach, and contains the strongest food elements known.

All first class grocers sell Grape-Nuts Food made at the Pure Food factories of the Postum Cereal Ce., IAd., Battle Creek, Mich.—Ade. dition. I have received thanks many time
